

dam and Eve and all Mankind came to the Fall by Curiosity, and the Elves because they were so wild and wanton and feakey and full of fearys that they could not rest when they were bid. And when the Elves of the Air were created they were exceeding fair bonny and bright. And as these two pretty fante kins lay in the sunshine a drying there came a Breeze and the Two without more ado flew away on it merrily over hills and dales. And when the Master missed em and saw where they were he said stay where ye be. And so from that time they have been Aeriall Sprites. To them go men who are axious as to absent friends or expected events or who would faine know their fate. But women seek them who would have children.
This comes of a very old story that among them there are a certain Some who would